Woman suffers deadly five-story fall

NICOLAUS CZARNECKI/METRO

▶ Police are still investigating the incident.

A woman in her 20s was killed this weekend when she fell down a shaft in a Fort Point building.

The unidentified woman was on the roof of 231 Summer St. on Saturday night when she fell, authorities said. Police did not release her name as of yesterday, but did say that the fall appears to be accidental.

Fire crews responded to the seven-story building about 8:30 p.m., but it took a while to find the woman because the person with her did not know where the blind shaft led to, fire officials said.

The woman was on the roof with others and fell from the seventh floor to the third floor. She was pronounced dead at the scene.

Two of the woman's friends were taken away in an ambulance after her body was found, the Globe reported. ● METRO/MN

▶ These mourners were among the hundreds of family and friends who gathered at the 9/11 memorial in the Boston Public Garden to pay tribute to those who lost their lives.

Standing on the steps of the State House yesterday, family members of those killed during the 9/11 attacks prefaced the names of their relatives with emotional descriptors.

They ranged from the heartfelt and mournful like "my beautiful, wonderful daughter" and "deeply missed, my loving daughter" — to the straightforward and agonizing "our mom" and "my wife."

State officials and family members, in front of a crowd of hundreds that gathered at the State House yesterday for the annual remembrance ceremony, read the roll call of the 206 people with connections to Massachusetts that were killed during the attacks.

"It's a club that none of us wanted to join, but thank God we have each other," said Sally White of East Walpole. Her daughter, Susan Blair, worked in the World Trade Center and was killed during the attacks. "There's always going to be a part of my heart that's missing."

While many remembered, others wanted to do more and helped assemble care packages for troops.

"There's no better day than today for service and to give back," BU student Meara Hamidiani said.

BOSTON. While crowds gathered to remember the lives lost 10 years ago, law enforcement stood guard across the city ensuring history would not repeat itself.

State troopers with bomb-sniffing dogs stood guard near the State House as the annual 9/11 ceremony took place there yesterday. At nearby City Hall Plaza, officers in tactical gear watched people pass before another memorial event took place.

Meanwhile, officers across the state searched for a Penske truck reportedly loaded with unlabeled drums in Roxbury on Saturday night. It was later discovered that it was picking up charitable goods. ● METRO

Dot fire ruled arson

BOSTON. A Saturday fire in Dorchester that injured a firefighter has been ruled arson.

The one-alarm blaze broke out about 4 a.m. at 130 Devon St.

A firefighter suffered a back injury and was taken to the hospital and a neighbor received a cut on the foot from broken glass.

Damage was estimated at $200,000.

Pools stay open despite failing tests

BOSTON. Despite routinely failing water-quality tests over the last five years, state-run swimming pools have been kept open.

Of 175 inspections of the state's pools and spray decks, two-thirds had at least one water-quality violation, according to the Globe.

The reviews noted chemical imbalances that can cause murky water and health problems. ● METRO

9/11 over, terror threat still stands

Officials warn Americans to stay alert ◗ Suspicious trucks found in New York, Boston ◗ Incident in the sky

John Brennan, President Barack Obama's counterterrorism adviser, said U.S. officials are working "'round the clock" to investigate a "specific and credible" threat of a terrorist attack against Washington or New York, even in the days after Sept. 11.

The terror threat concerns a possible vehicle-borne attack, sponsored by al-Qaeda, against New York or Washington.

President Barack Obama met with his national security team yesterday morning, to review the intelligence and ensure U.S. officials were pursuing all possible leads, Brennan said.

Over the weekend, the NYPD investigated the theft of three vans in possible connection with the terror threat, as two of the vans were stolen from a contracting company that did work at the World Trade Center site.

One of the vans was recovered yesterday in Queens. Police believe it was stolen not for terrorism purposes, but rather for the $60,000 worth of tools and equipment inside.

Police in Massachusetts yesterday also canceled a statewide search for a rental truck after it was found.

On Saturday night, someone saw men loading 55-gallon drums into a Penske truck and called police, who then raced to find the truck.

But it was determined that the truck was merely picking up charitable goods and donations, from different parts of the city, according to Boston police.

10 years after 9/11: 'It doesn't get any easier'

Emotional day reveals a nation still in mourning Family members say they are haunted by painful memories — and for some, being there yesterday was just too much People came from across the world to remember

Yesterday's 10-year anniversary of the Sept. 11 attacks revealed a fresh wound that for some — even a decade later — never quite healed.

"It's been hard for the family. I moved out of the country for six years because of 9/11," said Shana Skinner.

Skinner, a New York City resident, recalled lifting the miniblinds in the window of her Manhattan apartment just in time to see the second plane crash into the South Tower. It's a memory that is just as vivid today as it was on Sept. 12, 2001.

Her uncle, Walter Arthur McNeil, was killed that day.

It's still too painful for McNeil's daughter to attend the memorial service, said Skinner.

"His daughter is still going through it," she said. "That's why she's not here today."

It is not just family members of victims who continue to be profoundly moved by the memory of 9/11. Sunday's service drew people from across the country and across the world who came to mourn the lives lost that day.

"I wish my dad had been there to teach me how to drive, ask a girl out on a date and see me graduate from high school and a hundred other things I can't even begin to name ... I hope that I can make my father proud."

PETER NEGRON, WHOSE FATHER, PETE, DIED IN THE WTC ATTACK

"It's been like this for 10 years," said Ernesto Perez of the intense emotion connected to the date of 9/11. He traveled to New York City from Placerville, Calif., to mark the anniversary.

"I just wanted to feel whatever it is we all feel in mourning," he said.

Outside the ceremony in the public viewing area, firefighter James Brady, a New Jersey resident, was one of the first responders to the scene on 9/11. He cried openly yesterday as the names of the dead were read.

"Year to year, it doesn't get any easier," he said. "But it's not about us."

Sunday's ceremony at the World Trade Center began just after 8:30 a.m. with a processional. President Obama and first lady Michelle Obama were joined by former President George W. Bush and former first lady Laura Bush.

Bells tolled during moments of silence observed throughout the morning to mark each time a plane struck a tower, the Pentagon, the field in Shanksville, Pa., and when each tower fell.

The name of each victim was read aloud by family members in between performances by musicians including Yo-Yo Ma, James Taylor and Paul Simon. Thousands of people migrated in and around the World Trade Center to observe the ceremony, many of them clutching photos of loved ones who were lost, but not forgotten.

First responders join to remember victims

For many first responders, standing on the same ground where they tried in vain to save 2,749 people brought back haunting memories yesterday.

Responders told Metro that hearing the names of those killed brought back vivid scenes of helping — and being helpless.

"I saw the south tower fall first, which blew me into One Financial Center," recalled first responder Kevin Frazier, who said he was one of the first at the foot of the World Trade Center as the two towers burned.

He comes every year to the service to pay his respects, he said, and remember.

Upstate paramedic Jeff Sitterly arrived the week after Sept. 11 to help firefighters as they combed through the wreckage. "At that point we were just there for the recovery," he said.

He tries to attend the memorial services every year. "It's been very emotional for me to be here, and it's something I feel like I should do as often as I can."

Some responders like FDNY veteran James O'Brien, moved to Florida after the 9/11 attacks, where his wife Tina said she now feels safe. They returned to the city for the anniversary. "There's no place else," she said.

Watching outside the walls

Many responders were upset they could not attend the actual ceremony. Mayor Michael Bloomberg said family members were the priority, and so many of them wanted to attend it left little room for anyone else. First responders instead gathered at Zuccotti Park near the World Trade Center, where the city set aside space for them to watch. The FDNY also hosted their own 10-year anniversary ceremony Saturday at St. Patrick's Cathedral. Others chose to honor the 343 fallen at their own fire houses. The NYPD held its memorial ceremony Thursday. METRO/AB

▶ Because the World Trade Center is still an active construction site, visitors need to reserve passes in advance. Passes are available at 911memorial.org, and visitors must give a specific time to visit. Book early, as the memorial has already received thousands of requests. The next time available to visit the museum is Sept. 27.

9/11 memorial opens to the public

Today, for the first time, the National September 11 Memorial will open its gates to the public and show the nation what millions have waited a decade to see: The final resting place for the nearly 3,000 people killed in the attacks.

The memorial officially opened yesterday at the Sept. 11 ceremony, but only family members of those who perished in the attacks were allowed in.

Today the memorial opens, but only to those visitors who have reserved passes in advance. Sign up began back in July for the more than 1,000 visitors expected to stream into the site daily.

Memorial

The memorial features two granite pools each an acre in size, with 30-foot waterfalls. The pools are surrounded by swamp white oak trees, and one callery pear tree, the "survivor tree" that made it through the Sept. 11 attacks.

Along the memorial walls yesterday, which are inscribed with the names of those killed, some family members touched their relatives' names and left flowers by the etched letters. Many rubbed over the names with white paper and pencil.

One family member spoke privately to Metro about her satisfaction at finally seeing the long-awaited memorial completed.

"We were finally able to have a little bit of rest because we saw her name at the waterfall and they never had found her. So it was something for us to go on," said Andrea Villa, a Long Island resident whose husband's sister, Sharon Villa, died in the 9/11 attacks. Sharon Villa is one of the nearly 1,000 9/11 victims whose remains were never recovered.

The National September 11 Museum, which is located on the memorial, is slated to open in one year, in September 2012.

Solemn gathering marks Flight 93 crash in Pennsylvania

By 10:03 a.m. — the moment when the Boeing 757 passenger jet slammed into the field in Shanksville, Pa. — the sun warmed the faces of those who marked the anniversary.

The president and the first lady, Michelle Obama, walked to the boulder that marks the approximate site where the airplane crashed and then spent about 45 minutes talking with family members of the passengers and crew members who died.

Flight 93, bound for San Francisco from Newark, N.J., never hit its intended target — investigators believe the hijackers were planning to crash into either the U.S. Capitol or the White House — because some of the passengers stormed the cockpit and attempted, unsuccessfully, to regain control of the aircraft.

Pennsylvania Gov. Tom Corbett said their actions, which caused the plan to crash, "set a new standard for American bravery."

Paul Greengrass, who directed a feature film about Flight 93, said the passengers' achievement seems even more extraordinary today than it was a decade ago.

New York's streets see global pain

Yesterday, people from across the country — and the world — completed a pilgrimage to New York City to witness the power of the 10th anniversary of Sept. 11.

"I needed to be here to support the families of the victims," said Angela Forrey, 30, who flew to New York from Cleveland, Ohio, specifically for the memorial service, which she watched from the street. She got to Lower Manhattan early in the morning to secure a spot in the front of the space roped off for public viewing. "It sounds cliche, but I'll never forget. I wish I could have been here to help."

Forrey is not alone. Students Denislav Eftimo, 26, and Weichiao Lin, 22, flew from Bulgaria to be in Manhattan for the 10th anniversary.

"When I heard the names," Eftimo said of his experience. "It felt like I lost someone in my family."

Jill Gwen and Stanley Bernard, the founding minister and the president of Go Soular, a nonprofit religious aid organization, flew in from California.

They wept uncontrollably during the reading of the victims' names — yet knew no one who perished.

"My heart bleeds for people still in pain," said Gwen. "We wanted to be a part of history."

Antonio Ricman was in town from Switzerland.

"I'm really touched by what's happening today; to see how the families are grieving," he said. "I understand it's a very big day for America."

THE DAY'S NEWS AT A GLANCE

Green cats could give AIDS hope

U.S. scientists have developed a strain of green-glowing cats with cells that resist infection from a virus that causes feline AIDS, a finding that may help prevent the disease in cats and advance AIDS research in people.

The study, published yesterday in the journal Nature Methods, involved inserting monkey genes that block the virus into feline eggs, or oocytes, before they are fertilized.

The scientists also inserted jellyfish genes that make the modified cells glow an eerie green color – making the altered genes easy to spot.

Tests on cells taken from the cats show they are resistant to feline immunodeficiency virus, or FIV, which causes AIDS in cats.

"This provides the unprecedented capability to study the effects of giving AIDS-protection genes into an AIDS-vulnerable animal," Dr. Eric Poeschla of the Mayo Clinic in Rochester, Minn., who led the study, said.

Poeschla said that besides people, cats, and to some extent, chimpanzees, are the only mammals that develop a naturally occurring virus that causes AIDS.

Just as HIV does in people, the feline equivalent works by wiping out infection-fighting T-cells.

THE WORD

Metro's Dorothy Robinson shares her take on the world of gossip @dorothyatmetro dorothy.robinson@metro.us

When The Biebs met The Wintour

On Thursday night, during Fashion's Night Out, Dolce & Gabbana's Madison Avenue shop turned from hosting a sophisticated soiree to an absolute madhouse once Justin Bieber showed up. Decked head to toe in the designer, Bieber brought the paparazzi — and hoards of screaming young fans (they were lining up to buy $195 D&G autographed shirts; a portion of proceeds went to Bieber's favorite charity). Other big names at the FNO event included Tyson Beckford, Chase Crawford, Brooklyn Decker, Sophia Bush, Usher and Anna Wintour.

Beckford chatted with Metro on his style muse: "I'm inspired by walking down the street every day," he said. "I'm inspired by other guys, how they dress. [But] I really want to do this [Dolce & Gabbana] James Bond tuxedo, that thing is sick."

▶ Brooklyn Decker, Justin Bieber and Anna Wintour at Fashion's Night Out. Below, an artistic rendering of the results if Bieber and Wintour swapped hair styles.

When we finally got through the throngs of reporters, we asked Bieber what was one item he couldn't live without. And he actually had a sensible answer: "My shoes," he said. He even gabbed a bit about recording two new albums, saying, "I've been focusing a lot on my Christmas album. I'm excited about the final outcome."

And although our reporter couldn't hear what was said when the superstar actually met Anna Wintour at the event, let's hope it had something to do with one day swapping their iconic hairstyles.

Gaga goes vamp?

Even trendsetter Lady Gaga is partaking in the vampire trend, as it appears she has a new man in her life: "Vampire Diaries" star Taylor Kinney. According to Radar Online, the two met when Kinney was cast in the video for Gaga's new single, "You and I." Things seem to have gotten more serious, according to a source who spotted the pair out at a seaside bar in California recently. "It was just casual at first, but things are getting pretty hot and heavy," the source says. "I couldn't tell it was her at first. It just looked like some hot couple making out."

Talking points

Madonna, the ultimate cougar

Her directing work may be receiving lukewarm reviews, but Madonna has other career opportunities, apparently. Dating website CougarLife.com has reportedly approached the singer about becoming its spokeswoman, explaining that Madonna is "without a doubt the queen of cougars." The site is offering her $300,000, plus an additional $750,000 if she releases a song by Valentine's Day for the site.

Leonardo DiCaprio, a thief?

A jewelry store employee in Sydney, Australia, thought she was about to be robbed recently when a man entered wearing a hoodie, baseball cap and sunglasses, but it turns out it was just Leonardo DiCaprio, according to Hollyscoop. Before realizing her mistake, the clerk sent a customer to alert the shop's owner. "The customer actually leaned in and said, 'Do you want me to call the police?'" the other store's owner says. "So she rushed in next door, and said, you know, 'There might be a holdup next door.'" The $1,600 necklace that DiCaprio ended up purchasing was a gift for his mom and not rumored girlfriend Blake Lively, according to the store employees.

Madonna

Reese Witherspoon won't sue

Reese Witherspoon is looking to move on after getting hit by a car last week, and the Oscar winner is not planning to press charges, according to People magazine. But that doesn't mean the 84-year-old driver is in the clear, as she was still cited for failing to yield to a pedestrian in a crosswalk. Witherspoon was treated for minor injuries.

One way or another

Debbie Harry and Blondie are looking beyond their past, embracing technology and even teaming up with Amazon.com for their brand new album

Few would call Debbie Harry a geek, but the gorgeous Blondie singer has no problem with technology. In fact, she's always embraced electronic innovation.

"That's part of our business, really. We rely on technology to produce our music and perform concerts. A lot of our instruments are tied to computer or synthesizer technology. The change from analog to digital, that was a big change. But it's sort of more natural in a way; it's the way the brain actually operates, instead of the old mechanical way. I don't feel like a Luddite in any way," she declares.

Personal evolution is important, too; so the band's fall tour is not about revisiting their splendid hit songs like "Heart of Glass" or "Dreaming." The New York City-based new wave pop veterans' new album, "Panic of Girls," is out this month to add new sounds.

"I think that's the best part of it," Harry says of recording a new album. "We are in a very cushy position, because we are well known. But going around playing the older hits and everything wouldn't be, oh, I don't know ... it just wouldn't be as inspiring or interesting as trying to make new music. Let's face it: As our lives change, our experiences change and our insights improve. It's more relevant to sing or talk about things that are happening today. The world is changing so quickly. The difference in communications since the Internet came into being — the world is so different now and we're a part of it."

"Let's face it: As our lives change, our experiences change and our insights improve."

Touched by your Web presence

"Panic of Girls" is exclusively available through Amazon.com starting tomorrow. Debbie Harry explains the partnership:

"Because we're independent, we don't have any distribution — so it's an ideal situation for us. On a personal level, I've been dealing with Amazon as a consumer for a long time. Anytime I've gotten anything from Amazon, it's been quick and painless."

David Ellis: From snakes on planes to sharks in 3-D

STEVE DIETL © 2011 INCENTIVE FILM PRODUCTIONS, LLC

With summer coming to an end, it's the perfect time for a movie to scare you off the beach. Here to do it is "Shark Night 3D," from "Snakes on a Plane" director David Ellis.

Metro caught up with Ellis and one of the flick's stars, "American Idol" runner-up Katharine McPhee, to see what secrets about the film they're willing to spill. As it turns out, not many.

What can you tell us, without giving too much away, about "Shark Night 3D"?

DE: There's sharks in it. (Laughs) It's really weird. And a lot of the movie takes place at night.

KM: I'm in it.

DE: Kat's in it.

David, you're no stranger to genre movies. What's their appeal to a filmmaker?

DE: For me, I think it's just fun to be able to entertain people — for them to be able to go and escape from everything crazy that's going on in the world for an hour and a half and go have fun. To kind of scare them and make them laugh and make them cry, and just kind of play with their emotions.

KM: You like making people cry.

Were you afraid of sharks before you made the movie?

KM: I'm one of those people who, especially as a kid, would spend hours in the ocean swimming. I love swimming. But always in the back of my head, there was that fear of a shark coming and getting you.

DE: For me, I grew up in the ocean as well — my whole life in Malibu — and I'm aware of them, you respect them. But you have a better chance of getting hit by a coconut than getting killed by a shark. But it's a primal fear for people.

How creative do you get with the deaths in the movie?

DE: Pretty creative. Each one is different and unique. And what's cool about it is we had so many different types of sharks.

'Contagion' takes hold of the box office

Deadly virus thriller

"Contagion" caught on with filmgoers and easily took the top spot at the weekend box office in the United States and Canada, according to studio estimates. "Contagion" brought in $23.1 million in ticket sales over its first three days of release, distributor Warner Bros. says. The film tells the story of the race to contain a lethal virus that is quickly circling the globe.

"The Help," a surprise summer hit about black maids in civil rights-era Mississippi, slipped to second place after three straight weeks at No. 1. The film rung up $8.7 million over the weekend.

Amnesty International Local Group 133 & Representative Jason Lewis invite you to a State House screening of the documentary, Sri Lanka's Killing Fields, on Wednesday, September 14th!

Wednesday, September 14th, 11 a.m.

Massachusetts State House

House of Representatives Members' Lounge, 3rd Floor

First aired on British television in June 2011, "Sri Lanka's Killing Fields" captures, through live footage and extensive interviews with witnesses, the atrocities committed against civilians during the Sri Lankan Armed Forces' final campaign to defeat the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam (LTTE) in early 2009. The film was recently screened to wide acclaim at the United Nations in New York and Geneva, and has fueled renewed calls for an international response to these crimes.

In addition to the screening, members of Amnesty International Local Group 133 of Somerville will briefly discuss ongoing efforts to further human rights accountability in Sri Lanka.

This event is free and open to the public. Refreshments will be served.

For more information, please contact Kelly Turley at kelly@amnesty133.org or go to http://tinyurl.com/sl-documentary and www.amnesty133.org.

NY Fashion Week reviews

1 Alexander Wang
The details are what made Wang's part-sporty, part-"Fast and Furious" (complete with graphic BMX helmets) clothes stand out from the other athletic-flavored looks we've seen this week. The word "technical" appeared throughout his press notes for a reason: The collection was filled with small design feats, from his mesh laser-cut utility shorts — which featured pockets that cleverly revealed the hands tucked inside — to the sheer inserts on a cargo skirt printed in Hawaiian style florals, an early contender for the best print of the season. KENYA HUNT

2 Jason Wu
Sporty and street are not exactly words that come to mind when you think of Michelle Obama's go-to designer, and yet he was able to own both ideas by interpreting them in his own polished, Wu-ian way. The beauty is that he experimented with the sporty trend in a way that didn't read too literal. For instance, his lightweight, practically transparent parkas gave his bejeweled collared shirts and short-short pairings a subtle urban edge. The street references surfaced in the floral prints with hand-drawn graphics he commissioned from the graffiti artist Kaws, an industry favorite. It all made for an impressive sign of growth for the designer. METRO/KH

Start strengthening your network now

- Don't wait until there are rumors of layoffs to reach out to well-connected colleagues
- The most helpful professional networks develop over time — and work both ways

Should the ax fall and your job get severed, you'll have to get by with a little help from your work friends. But there's a big problem: If you're like the average laid-off employee, your friends will all be left behind in that same building, which is clearly firing more than hiring these days.

That's why career counselors recommend you foster industry friendships far beyond the block where you work now, while you're still employed.

"It's much easier to have that network ready in place when you need it than to try to scramble and connect the people at the last minute," About.com job-seeker guru Alison Doyle cautions. "Then, all of a sudden you're begging people."

Instead, agrees "Connecting With Success" author Kathleen Barton, your network should be a long-standing structure, a regular exchange of favors and tips.

"It's about building mutually beneficial relationships where you're not always asking for help when you're contacting them," she says. "Maybe you're giving updates or finding out how they're doing or how you can support them."

Or maybe you're just calling to say howdy — one friendly lunch-hour phone call at a time. "Don't try to build a network overnight," Doyle advises. "Take it one step at a time. Spend a little bit of everyday working on it, looking for new contacts. Don't be intimidated — you're not the only person who is new at this."

DREW HINSHAW
letters@metro.us

Finding the little reasons

Great networking is about using those little excuses to reach out to a mere acquaintance.

"There are so many creative ways you can do that," says Barton. "Rather than Christmas, when everybody gets cards, I send Thanksgiving cards to let [people] know I'm thinking about them."

GETTY IMAGES

▶ She'll be looking at very different careers — in a very different world.

What will the job market look like in 20 years?

We asked Rohit Talwar, CEO of forecasting firm Fast Future, for a 2031 report. Hint: Start working on your farming skills now.

Congrats to Apple University, class of 2031?

"School funding will be a huge issue because of the booming costs of looking after retirees. That's why companies will sponsor schools. In developed countries, the barrier between business and education will be blurred. Everything will be commercial and sponsored. If kids go to a school sponsored by a particular company, they might have to work for that company during the school breaks. Alternatively, they might pay one percent of their later income to the company that funded their school."

In the classroom

No more teachers, no more books? Well, not quite, but school is about to change:

"By 2031, education will have changed enormously, especially in developing countries. Technology will act as a teacher. There will be a teacher, but he or she will be many miles away."

"Teachers will be seen as a luxury. We'll essentially pay heavily for the specialization they provide, as technology can take care of most of the teaching."

Bad news for bank tellers, good news for nurses

"Bank tellers will essentially disappear by 2031, as will jobs like subway drivers and check-in agents at airports. Only those who pay a premium will get human service in such places. At the same time, a whole range of jobs will be created to look after retirees. Vertical farming will provide new careers, as will new forms of transport and technology-based education."

Fashion and retail get a makeover

"3-D printing will revolutionize manufacturing. Customers will be able to walk into a shop and design their own clothes, which will be manufactured on the spot. That will create new jobs, too." ELISABETH BRAW/MWN

From 'South Park' creators to professors

Trey Parker and Matt Stone have already taught America's youth about art, religion and war, but last week they gave some lessons in person — in a New York University writing class.

The "South Park" creators surprised a class on "Storytelling Strategies" for mtvU's "Stand In." The Tony Award winners told students to keep their stories simple.

"We started to learn that simple was better," Parker told the class. "But we had to learn that all over again with everything we did — 'South Park,' 'Team America,' 'Book of Mormon.'"

"It's so cool to talk and pretend like we know what we're doing," added Stone.

MTV's 24-hour college network, mtvU, will air Stone and Parker's "Stand In" to more than 750 college campuses; the episode will also be available on demand at mtvU starting Oct. 3.

Violence is never deserved

In reading your letters about the 9/11 attacks, I've seen a number that say they were justified and deserved. That in my opinion is complete hogwash and probably misdirected self-hatred. It's like that nonsense about women who dress in a certain way bringing on their own rapes. Countries that are attacked, whether us or India or England or Israel or Indonesia, will not have a perfect, pure response nor should that be demanded of them.

PAUL SIMONS, VIA E-MAIL

9/11 coverage needs a look

CNN should be ashamed, airing an extremely opinionated, political, anti-American program the night before 9/11. I'm not sure this was the appropriate time to give people like Valerie Plame, Cindy Sheehan and others a political platform. To include them in a program celebrating the brave men and women of 9/11 is an insult to the memories of the true heroes of Sept. 11.

MICHAEL CHIMENTI, VIA E-MAIL

Television coverage of 9/11 dealt mostly with the emotional turmoil of survivors' experiences. What was missing was the very controversial explanation of what really happened: How did the buildings fall so fast? Why did building 7 collapse? Flight 93's debris field spread out over eight miles. The Internet is filled with websites on these subjects but not a word from the media; it really is worth a look.

FRANK ST. GEORGE, VIA E-MAIL

Obama, wake up to Egypt

Where is the condemnation from the U.N., the president and the secretary of state for the burning of the Israeli embassy in Egypt? The president is "concerned" — it's a disgrace not to condemn those he calls "freedom fighters." What a farce.

JOAN BACHMAN, VIA E-MAIL

No one lied about Iraq War

RE: "REMEMBER HOW WE GOT HERE ...": In response to Brayden Simms' remark, "By now most Americans have accepted the fact that we were lied into a self-destructive war," what does he mean by "fact"? I refer Mr. Simms to Melanie Phillips' book, "The World Turned Upside Down," Chapter 3, "The Iraq War." There was no lying, and Phillips lays out how such a claim is itself a distortion of the truth.

Horoscope

♍ Virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22. Unfortunately, you might be forced to associate with people who make you feel extremely uncomfortable. Suppress any abrasive comments and remain tactful at all times.

♎ Libra Sept. 23-Oct. 23. If you've been sweeping a number of unpleasant tasks under the rug, it might turn out to be the day of reckoning. Unfortunately, you won't be able to put off burdensome tasks.

♏ Scorpio Oct. 24-Nov. 22. Don't fall into a trap made by someone you consider to be a friend but who is always trying to bait you into an argument about politics or religion.

♐ Sagittarius Nov. 23-Dec. 21. You must know that making unreasonable demands or requests on your mate or family members will be rejected, so why go down that avenue? Don't be a troublemaker.

♈ Aries March 21-April 19. Something you never promised is likely to be expected of you anyway. Rather than go to battle over it, do it if you have the time.

♉ Taurus April 20-May 20. Unless you can avoid the company of those who have superior attitudes, you can expect to be bossed around a bit. However, I doubt you'll stand by and take it.

♊ Gemini May 21-June 20. Those who are usually around to pick up the pieces and/or back you up aren't likely to be there for you when you need them the most. You had better be prepared to be totally self-reliant.

♋ Cancer June 21-July 22. Don't get angry and try to force compliance on those you thought were in accordance with your proposals but obviously aren't. It's not their fault.

♌ Leo July 23-Aug. 22. Unless you can say no and mean it, you're likely to open yourself up to being pressured into doing something you dislike by someone who knows how to manipulate you. BERNICE BEDE OSOL

Things to look for tonight vs. Miami

Patriots at Miami Dolphins 7 tonight (ESPN, 98.5)

The Patriots finally see Reggie Bush tonight.

1 Can New England contain Reggie Bush?

This will be the first time the Patriots get a look at Reggie Bush during the regular season; he was inactive when the Pats and Saints met back on Nov. 30, 2009.

Bush is a dynamic player who can really open up the running game, passing game and special teams. While the Fins have moved away from the "Wildcat" offense, look for them to use Bush in a number of ways depending on who the Pats bring out on the front line.

2 How will the right side of the line fare?

With Sebastian Vollmer banged up, rookie T Nate Solder could get the nod. On top of that, RB Dan Connolly isn't 100 percent either, and it's unclear how much time he'll get.

With recently signed former Chiefs left guard Brian Waters filling in for him, there's a decent amount of inexperience on the right side of the line. Look for Dolphins LB Cameron Wake to reap the benefits.

3 Opening the new year in a big way

Is there any better way to start the season? Under the lights, prime time, against a division foe.

If the results are anything like last season's MNF game versus the Dolphins, Pats fans will be happy. They beat up on them 41-14 then, with the special teams — Patrick Chung, mostly — shining bright.

Expect to see Tom Brady on point tonight. He's 7-1 in his last eight MNF games, dating back to Dec. 26, 2005.

The Pats are 8-1 in openers since 2002.

0 Total impact of those players

New England on third down

The Patriots desperately need to improve third-down defense in 2011. Here are the five worst third-down defenses since 2000 (team, opponents' conversion percentage, team record):

- 2004 Raiders 47.42%, 5-11
- 2008 Chiefs 47.39%, 2-14
- 2008 Colts 47.39%, 12-4
- 2000 Cardinals 47.30%, 4-12
- 2010 Patriots 47.14%, 14-2

FFChamps.com's player to watch

In tonight's other game, Darren McFadden owners are drooling over his matchup against the Broncos run defense. In 2010, the Broncos allowed the second-most rushing yards in the league (154.6 yards per game).

Boston College fell to 0-2 on the young season Saturday, when the Eagles were handed a 30-3 thrashing by UCF. Duke is up next.

'Fins always a tough match

The Patriots are coming off a 2010 season that saw them twice beat the Dolphins handily.

Don't think that means tonight is going to be a cakewalk.

Last year aside, Miami has a long history of being a thorn in New England's side. Since 2001, the Pats have run up a 48-14 record against the rest of the AFC East. Seven of those losses — exactly half — have come against the Dolphins.

So looking past Miami — even as 7-point favorites — would be a very big mistake. Heck, it's even how Bill Belichick defined that mythical "Patriot Way" over the weekend.

"Right now our way is to try to find a way to beat Miami," he said. "That's really what we're about now. Trying to prepare well, trying to have everything tightened up, go down there confidently, go out there and play well. Hopefully that will result in a victory; that's what we're trying to do now."

Playoff panic time? That starts right now

This week

The Red Sox end the third-to-last week of the regular season the same way they started it: playing Tampa Bay.

- Boston gets a much-needed break with today's off-day.
- They host Toronto for two starting tomorrow. Tim Wakefield will take the mound in search of his 200th win — and some postseason traction for his team.
- The Sox stay at home after the Jays leave for what could be a massive four-game series against the hard-charging Rays. That starts Thursday and ends Sunday.

Rays sweep Red Sox, narrow wild card deficit to just 3.5 games Boston 2-9 this month Five straight L's

It might as well still be summer. But when it comes to their chances of playing in fall, this is the winter of the Red Sox's discontent.

That Boston lost its fifth straight game yesterday was bad. That it came to the team suddenly on their heels in the race for the AL wild card was worse.

The Rays moved within 3.5 games of the playoff spot by handing the Sox a 9-1 drubbing at Tropicana Field.

When the teams' three-game series started, Tampa Bay was basically toast. But after sweeping Boston, they're walking on air — and the Sox appear to be fading fast.

"Hell yeah, you've got to panic at this point. But you're not going to do anything panicking but playing better."
DAVID ORTIZ

Boston's five-game losing streak is the longest since they started the season 0-6.

They have 16 games left in the regular season to try to seal the playoff deal, either by catching the first-place Yankees or holding off the Rays. That puts extra importance on this week's two-game series against Toronto — and basically turns the series against Tampa Bay starting Thursday into four playoff games.

Jon Lester had his worst outing in months yesterday, giving up four runs on eight hits and three walks in just four innings of work. METRO
